

IFMA CHAPTER NETWORKING BREAKFAST

The latest trends in monitoring a building's actual energy performance

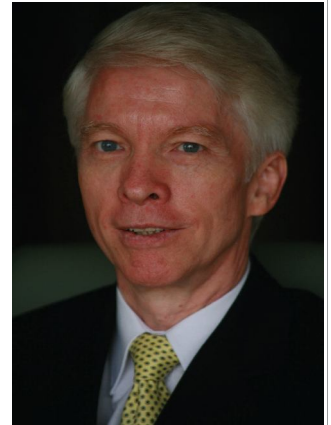

28 August 2008, Thursday

ASHRAE Standard 189.1, LEED, and a growing catalogue of building rating schemes and methodologies are requiring more and more reporting of actual performance. This in turn requires meters and sensors, and the data acquisition systems to collect and present the millions of pieces of data subsequently generated. Who do you think is going to be responsible for cleaning, sorting, validating, presenting, and analysing this data? And drawing useful conclusions from it? Facilities Managers. Meter manufacturers all claim that their meters will make life easy for facilities managers, but is that the common experience? What strategies do successful companies adopt to resolve the data dilemma on an on-going basis? This presentation will layout some of your options.

Robert Allender

Robert Allender is Managing Director of Energy Resources Management where, for the past 15 years, he has filled roles ranging from defacto Vice-President-of -Energy-Management all the way to energy-waste watchdog. If it has to do with energy management, he's probably done it.

He holds a degree from Cornell University, and was the first person in Asia to receive Certified Energy Manager accreditation from the Association of Energy Engineers, of which he is now a life member.
